What is Motivational Interviewing?

It is a way of talking with someone that helps them find their own reasons and motivation to make positive changes. Its gentle, respectful and based on listening rather than telling. MI helps the person explore their own thoughts and feelings until they decide what they want to do.

Patients with long-term cardio-renal conditions often struggle with adherence, lifestyle changes, and engagement with regular monitoring. Motivational Interviewing supports a holistic, person-centred approach by helping staff explore patients' beliefs, barriers and motivations, rather than simply giving instructions.

By using skilled listening and open questions, staff can build trust, reduce resistance, and support patients to take ownership of their health, improving uptake of reviews, self-management, and long-term outcomes across cardiovascular, renal and metabolic pathways.

What you'll get

- Clear, practical MI skills you can use tomorrow
- Demonstrations, interaction and memorable examples
- Techniques for face-to-face and telephone consultations
- Better engagement, better outcomes, less burnout
- MI isn't flowery – it's smarter communication that saves your breath, your time and improves effectiveness.

Right to Choose - Information for GPs

Patients have a legal right to choose any clinically appropriate provider (NHS or independent sector), in England that holds an NHS contract for the service they need. This applies broadly to both physical and mental health and includes ADHD and Autism assessments for children, young people and adults.

The list of providers offering Autism and ADHD assessments under Right to Choose is constantly evolving and it is advisable for patients to check the waiting times as these may not always be shorter than local NHS provision due to a recent increase in demand. It is important for patients to note that some Right to Choose providers only offer online assessments which may not be suitable for some patients e.g. those with additional communication and learning needs.

Right to Choose referrals for ADHD and Autism assessments must come from a GP. Referral forms vary and details can be found on the provider's website. Before referring, it is recommended that the GP checks the provider's website to confirm that they meet the following criteria:

- Holds a valid NHS Standard Contract
- Offers services for the patient's age group

GPs are also advised to familiarise themselves with providers' prescribing and ongoing treatment arrangements prior to referral, recognising that acceptance of shared care remains at GP discretion and subject to local prescribing arrangements.

The referral must be for a clinically appropriate service. If a patient's choice is deemed clinically unsuitable, this must be discussed with the patient and clearly documented in their medical record.

Where patients and families are seeking an ADHD assessment, they should be strongly encouraged to choose a provider that can deliver both assessment and ongoing treatment to support titration of medication and ensure continuity of care and clinical safety. Right to Choose cannot be used for medication only services.

GPs should consider if an assessment under Right to Choose is in the best interest of patients with complex needs (e.g. co-occurring mental health) who are likely to need ongoing clinical interventions from specialist NHS neurodevelopmental or mental health services.
